

A compound sentence is composed of at least two independent clauses. The clauses are connected by:

1. a coordinating conjunction (fanboys)
I love dogs, but I own a goat.
2. correlative conjunctions (either/or, neither/nor, not only/but also)
Either I need to buy a new car, or I need to get a chauffer.
3. semicolon
Vampires fly; werewolves howl.
4. conjunctive adverb preceded by a semicolon
The rules are clear; nonetheless, I choose not to follow them.

Conjunctive Adverbs

accordingly	however	nonetheless
also	indeed	otherwise
besides	instead	similarly
consequently	likewise	still
conversely	meanwhile	subsequently
finally	moreover	then
furthermore	nevertheless	therefore
hence	next	thus

fanboys

for, and, nor, but, or, yet, so

HW: 20 compound sentences using equal amounts of each of the connectors.

A compound sentence is composed of at least two independent clauses. The clauses are connected by:

1. a coordinating conjunction (fanboys)
I love dogs, but I own a goat.
2. correlative conjunctions (either/or, neither/nor, not only/but also)
Either I need to buy a new car, or I need to get a chauffer.
3. semicolon
Vampires fly; werewolves howl.
4. conjunctive adverb preceded by a semicolon
The rules are clear; nonetheless, I choose not to follow them.

Conjunctive Adverbs

accordingly	however	nonetheless
also	indeed	otherwise
besides	instead	similarly
consequently	likewise	still
conversely	meanwhile	subsequently
finally	moreover	then
furthermore	nevertheless	therefore
hence	next	thus

fanboys

for, and, nor, but, or, yet, so

HW: 20 compound sentences using an equal amount of each of the connectors.